Expected result:
The system should be able to transfer successfully.

Answer :

Severity: Critical

Why:

- Impact on Core Functionality: Money transfer is a primary feature of any banking application. A failure here means the system is fundamentally broken.
- Data Integrity & Security Block: The system is incorrectly identifying valid credentials as invalid. This is a major functional error in the security layer.
- User Lockout (No Workaround): The defect doesn't just stop the transaction; it actively penalizes the user by locking their PIN. The user is now barred from using the app entirely and likely needs to visit a branch or call support to reset it.

Priority: Highest

Why:

- Business Reputation: Incorrectly locking a customer's PIN causes high frustration and erodes trust in the bank's digital security.
- Operational Cost: A surge in "Locked PIN" cases will overwhelm the customer support center and physical branches.
- Testing Blocker: Quality Assurance (QA) cannot verify the "Transfer to other bank" flow until this is fixed, delaying the entire project timeline.

Summary:
This is a Critical/High bug because it breaks the most important user journey and results in a permanent lockout of the customer's account.
